

Our hosting on Erudit (and annual funding from them) is on hold until we have published some articles. Depending on when we get the current submissions published and when Erudit makes their annual decisions, we should be added to Erudit in their 2027 or 2028 “admissions” cycle.

Speaking of submissions, we have 10 papers in process, 7 of which have been developed from talks given at the last conference. It’s been a lot to manage, since most of the papers arrived within a two-week period. But I have found people generally willing to serve as reviewers, or recommending others if they themselves don’t have time. I expect to have most reviews back by mid-October, so I can ask for revisions from authors by the end of the year. Publication, then, should begin early in 2027.

French editor Sebastien Chonavey is managing two submissions at the moment, one in French one in English.

Thanks to Jon for all his work in encouraging conference presenters to submit, and for helping to revive and expand the editorial board.
